Idaho Ellison: His Story, His Words
With John Hiler
The West is full of characters, some good, some bad, and then there are those like Idaho Ellison, who bring their history to life. Ellison’s first person account of his life is full of the flavor of those early days of western history.

His story begins at Rattlesnake Station and continues through his boyhood on the Cherokee reservation in Oklahoma, to years in early Mountain Home, and then as a cowboy and horse wrangler around the west. It includes army days at the Mexican border with George Patton, becoming a Hollywood actor and a trick-roping artist, working in Las Vegas, Phoenix, Louisville, and ending up in Utah and Twin Falls. This is a fascinating life story you won’t want to miss.

John Hiler was born and raised in Glenns Ferry, and educated at Glenns Ferry High School, Gonzaga University and Idaho State College. John is the great grandson of Idaho pioneers and is well-steeped in western history, having heard stories from both sides of his family for his whole life. He began writing in high school and has continued through the present as a regular contributor to the El-Wybee Hi-Liner newspaper. He has published in Idaho Magazine, Idaho Genealogy Magazine, The Whistle Pig and several times in Owyhee Outposts, the nationally recognized Journal of the History of Owyhee County.

For more than twenty years John has been a member of the Board of Directors of the Idaho Heritage Trust, a statewide organization dedicated to preserving historic buildings in Idaho, and serves as its treasurer. He has been a Mountain Home business man for over 50 years. He is an antique book dealer and a dedicated Hemingway collector and maintains his own library and archives.

Gooding: A Real Chautauqua Town
With Kelly Kast
Education, culture, and self and civic improvement were every bit as important to Idahoans in the early 1900s as these are to Idaho's current generations. For Idaho pioneers, however, opportunities to indulge in informational and inspirational stimulation were few and far between. In 1904, the creation of the Circuit Chautauqua, pronounced shaw-taw-kwah, meant people living in rural Idaho small towns could receive the education and uplift they craved. While Chautauquas were held in many Idaho towns, no town in Idaho matched the enthusiasm for Chautauqua Week like Gooding. Every year that Gooding hosted a Chautauqua, people from all over southern Idaho flocked to see the top performers and lecturers of the day. Few are alive now to remember the Circuit Chautauqua, but this unique and intriguing movement and its impact on Gooding County's beginning years is well worth a second look.

Kelly Kast was born and raised in Gooding County, and has spent many years researching and writing about the intriguing history of south-central Idaho. Kelly was a staff writer for the Gooding County Leader for seven years, and is the editor for three years. She has published many history articles with Idaho Magazine. Kelly currently works for the Idaho State Police and recently published Without Compromise, the history of the Idaho State Police, in celebration of its 75th anniversary.

First Encounters: The Astorian Fur Traders
With Ron James
First Encounters is an overview of the Astorian fur traders (everyone who has heard of Lewis and Clark but the Astorians were the ones who discovered the Oregon Trail), including Wilson Price Hunt and Robert Stuart, who were the first Euro-Americans to explore and document southern Idaho. Between 1811 and 1814, the Astorians established the first permanent American settlements in the Pacific Northwest and discovered the route that would later become the Oregon Trail. Their adventures (and misadventures) are some of the most exciting, dramatic, and tragic to take place in the history of the Old West.

Ronald James teaches English and Advanced Placement Literature and Composition at Canyon Ridge High School and is an adjunct Cultural Anthropology instructor at the College of Southern Idaho. He received his M.A. in Anthropology from the University of Idaho in 1993. James has done extensive archaeological and ethnographic research on the Chinese and Japanese contributions to southern Idaho history. His thesis, “Ruins of a World: Chinese Gold Mining in the Snake River Canyon” was published in 1993. Other publications include “Secrets of the Magic Valley and Hagerman’s Remarkable Horse” (2002) in which James contributed chapters on the Native American, the Astorians and mining. James is also a member of the Twin Falls County Historical Preservation Commission.

Oral History of Railroading in Southern Idaho
Most of us love the exotic sound of locomotives working in the distance as they travel with their mysterious cargos to far off places. Many of us have never stopped to wonder why the rails came here and not there and what impact it had on our current existence. Ever wonder why major towns were created nearly every 25 to 50 miles apart? Why would the Latter Day Saints (Mormon) Church build the first railroads to reach Idaho? The railroads of Southern Idaho have had a major impact on who we are. Learning what railroads are, how they were created and how they impact who we are today is an interesting and fun way to view our past and look at our present.
